

UAF home- students earn degrees

Twila Strom, Fort Yukon; Hilda Olick, Kwethluk and Camille Zacaharas, Kotzebue.

The university's X-CED program is a field-based program with faculty members living and working throughout the state. Students enrolled in the program can earn selected education degrees entirely through the program and never visit the UAF campus.

Students in five widely separated communities earned degrees from the University of Alaska-Fairbanks' Cross Cultural Educational Development program, commonly called X-CED. The five graduates took most, or all, of their course work in their home towns, seldom setting foot on the UAF campus.

Earning a bachelor of education degree in secondary education with an emphasis in social science was Carol Charlie, Nelson Island.

Mary Richmond of Emmonak received a bachelor of education in elementary education with a humanities emphasis. Elementary education degrees with emphasis in social science were awarded to