Villages Have Warmer Homes in Northern Regions

the state will have warmer homes and lower fuel costs this winter as a result of a federally financed self-help program to winterize low-income homes.

Alaska's project, the largest in the nationwide plan, is being administered statewide by Rur-AL CAP, who has contracted

Each region has selected several of its villages on the basis

Slope Borough Housing Authorials will be arriving and be air from outside. installed by volunteers, in many In a weather-tight home, cases the homeowner and CETA winter fuel bills have been re-clude insulation of walls, ceil- mized. ings, and floors; installation of RurAL CAP also plans to solid-core doors and storm win- conduct consumer education with regional entities to direct of need, to receive materials dows, and repair of cracks workshops in participating viloperations at the local level, to winterize eligible homes in between walls and ceilings that lages. These workshops will Target areas for this year's each village. A total of 192 have opened up over time as funds are NANA (administered homes are involved; 70 in the houses settle into the locally by Mauneluk, Associa- Bering Straits, 63 in Arctic ground. These measures contion), Bering Straits (Kawerak) Slope and 59 in NANA. By serve warm air within the house and Arctic Slope (Arctic North midsummer, construction mater- and prevent infiltration of cold > duced by as much as half and efficient home. Improvements covered in health problems greatly mini-cover conservation and selfhelp material installation techniques. Fuel conservation is an on-going concern; the goal of the workshops is to provide homeowners with basic conservation skills and knowledge of how to maintain an energy