

Arts from the Arctic exhibit tour

Arts from the Arctic, the multinational exhibit of circumpolar indigenous art which was organized by the Institute of Alaska Native Arts and the Anchorage Museum of History and Art, will begin its travel schedule around Alaska in October. After a summer tenure at the Anchorage Museum, the exhibit will be divided into two parts and travel to rural Alaskan sites during the winter and spring and will be on exhibit at the University of Alaska Museum in Fairbanks during the summer of 1994. The exhibit will then again be divided into two parts and travel to more rural sites during the following winter and spring and will be at the State Museum in Juneau for the summer of 1995.

In addition to Anchorage, Fairbanks and Juneau, the tentative travel schedule includes the following sites: Sheldon Jackson

Museum (Sitka), Kenai Bicentennial Visitor and Cultural Center, Tongass Historical Museum (Ketchikan), NANA Museum of the Arctic (Kotzebue), Sheldon Museum (Haines), Inupiat History, Language and Culture Center (Barrow), Valdez Museum, Sam Fox Memorial Museum (Dillingham), Pratt Museum (Homer), KANA Alutiiq Culture Center (Kodiak). For more information on the travel schedule, contact the Anchorage Museum of History and Art, (907) 343-4326.

Arts from the Arctic opened at the Anchorage Museum on May 6. Artists from Sweden, Northwest Territories, British Columbia and Russia joined Alaska Native artists to demonstrate their skills in the museum for four days as part of the Arctic Native Heritage Festival.
