

Ruling Elder Visits-- Woman Elected by Presbytery

FAIRBANKS—Ruling Elder Lois H. Stair—the first woman to be elected Moderator of the United Presbyterian Church—stopped here last week on her way to Barrow for a visit.

With her were Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Corbett (he is Associate Synod Executive of the Washington-Alaska Synod) and Richard Madden, pastor of the United Presbyterian Church at Palmer.

It is traditional, Mrs. Stair said, for the moderator to "interpret the work of the church around the world to the local people." Her visit here, she said, will enable her to tell others about Alaska.

She was particularly interested in visiting with Joe Uppickson of the Arctic Slope area, she said, because the Presbyterian church, through a new committee called the Committee for Self-Development of People, had provided funds to help the people of that area work towards settlement of the land claims and provide for the development of schools in that area.

The money was given, she said, without "any restrictions" and this act of giving had been somewhat controversial. "It's an experimental kind of thing," she explained, a "matter of trusting new people to make their own decisions."

She said, "Our church has an increased interest in the self-development of people where they live. We want them to tell us about their needs and how the church should serve them in their own communities, instead of the old style of telling people with different traditions to accept our ideas, along with the Christian faith."

She came to Alaska, she said, at the request of a woman from Lawrence Island who attended the general assembly in the Lower 48.

The "theory in our church is that we want to hear the voices of people who have not been heard before," she said. This accounts for the increased involvement of youth and women in the decision making process, she said.

The position of moderator is a temporary one-year position, she said, and it took her five years to make up her mind that she could do it "because it meant the schedule of our family has to depend on where I'm going."

Five years ago, when she was on the national nominating committee, she was asked if she would consider taking the position at some later date when a woman would be asked to serve.

Now, she said, her husband does the cooking and writes to his mother—things that she formerly did.

"He has always said that the most marvelous appliance in the house was the laundry basket," she said, because "you put things in and they get back in the drawers," folded and clean.

That doesn't happen this year, she said.

On her last trip she was gone three weeks.

How does this affect her family?

Her sons, Ralph, Jr., and Stuart Randall, are 26 and 23. If they were young and at home, she wouldn't be able to be moderator, she said. And her husband Ralph—president and general manager of the General Casting Corporation, Waukesha is "very supportive."

By the time her year in office is over she will have visited almost every state in the union, but she is not, she said, going overseas.

Army May Permit Kuskokwim Channel

The Department of the Army may issue a permit to the McGrath & Kuskokwim Freight Service to dredge a channel from the main Kuskokwim River channel to the Aniak landing strip at Aniak, Alaska, if the proposal meets with public approval.

Spokesmen for the Alaska District Corps of Engineers have asked that interested parties submit comments or objections to the proposed project to Box 546, Bethel, Alaska, 99559, to enable the Army to make a decision based on the public interest.

The proposal for dredging from the main river channel to the landing strip at the lower end of the Aniak runway to improve navigation into Aniak.

Dredging will be to a 6-foot depth at extreme low water to enable delivery of freight to Aniak at any stage of water.

Approximately 100,000 cubic yards of gravel and sand will be moved. Some of this material will be used to improve the air strip at Aniak and the rest will be sold to private individuals.

According to the Corps of Engineers, comments on such things as the projects effect on navigation, fish and wildlife, water quality, recreation or the general welfare of the people will be accepted and considered in determining whether it would be in the best public interest to grant a permit.

Comments should be mailed to reach the above address not later than Feb. 25 to insure that they can be taken into consideration before a decision is reached.

Kotzebue, Alaska 99752

We hope to have more fish buyers to negotiate with us this year.
In 1970 we sold over a million pound of chum and in 1971 we sold over 750,000 pounds of chum.
In 1971 we were negotiating with Mitsubishi International Corporation out of Seattle, Washington the rates were:

No. 1—$.31 per pound
No. 2—$.27 per pound
Salmon roe $.90 per pound

And for this year we expected a higher rate.

Dorms for Alaska

Senator Ted Stevens said from Washington, D.C. Wednesday that the president's budget contained $4,900,000 for the construction of regional Bureau of Indian Affairs dormitories at Tok, Ft. Yukon and Dillingham.

Another sum of $1,250,000 is included in the budget for construction of a dormitory in Fairbanks, Senator Stevens added.

In testimony before the Interior appropriations subcommittee last year Stevens had stressed the need for area schools and dorms in larger villages where students from surrounding communities would attend school and be permitted to return home with some frequency and be close enough for parental visits.

The location of the schools would be geographically and culturally similar to their home so the adjustment of attending school away from their village would be easier.

Stevens said that construction estimates were $1.8 million for Dillingham, $1.4 million for Tok and $1.6 million for Ft. Yukon.

In testimony before the Interior appropriations subcommittee last year, Stevens had asked for an additional $1.4 million for the Fairbanks BIA dormitory

"Academic facilities had been planned and funded by the people of Alaska" he said, "and the BIA was to build the dormitories, but with escalating costs, the appropriations were not enough."

"This funding will permit an additional 100 students from the 'bush' to reside in an urban area and go to integrated schools," Stevens concluded.
