Ira B. Harkey, winner of the Pulitzer Prize for editorial writing in 1963 and currently Carnegie visiting professor of journalism at the University of Alaska, will autograph copies of his autobiography, "The Smell of Burning Crosses," from 2 to 5 p.m. Saturday, Nov. 9 at Adler's Bookstore in Fairbanks.

Alaska's Glacial History to Be Probed in the Brooks Range Area

COLLEGE—The Brooks separates timber and tundra in Alaska's Arctic. South of the range are meandering rivers and stands of aspen, birch and spruce. Nearly 200 miles north, across the spongy tundra of the North Slope, is the Arctic Ocean.

Twenty-thousand years ago fingers of ice extended as much as 50 miles north and south of the range as Alaska and much of the northern hemisphere were caught fast in the grip of the last ice age.

Reconstructing the overall glacial sequence and subsequent environmental changes from glaciers to forests in Alaska's northern Interior is a task of University of Alaska Geologist Thomas D. Hamilton, one of many geologists working to unravel the problems of the Pleistocene—the epoch in geological time that includes the most recent two million years of earth's history.

"We know less about many aspects of the glacial history of Alaska than turn-of-the-century geologists knew about the Midwest and the effects of the ice age there," Dr. Hamilton said.

He attributes the relative lack of information about the ice age history of the state, and the day, Nov. 11, in a formal ceremony scheduled to begin at 4:45 p.m. in the University of Alaska plaza.

Contingents from Ft. Wainwright, including the Ninth Army Band, UA's Reserve Officer Training Corps (ROTC) and Women's Drill Team, and the university's veterans, club-sponsor of the event—will meet in the plaza to lower the flag and pay tribute to the nation's veterans.

The program will be open to the public.

Brooks Range in particular, to the fact that only a few score geologists have concentrated on the glacial geology of the remote region, while far more have worked to decipher the glacial sequence in the Midwest and other more accessible glaciated regions.

While some geologists investigating the isolated northernmost mountain chain on the continent have studied and published glacial histories of individual valleys, Dr. Hamilton's prime concern is the overall sequence, something which has never been worked out to geologists' satisfaction.

Pulling out maps showing glacial advances at different times during the Pleistocene in the smaller states, he said, "This is the type of thing geologists need to better understand the geology of the Brooks region."

Dr. Hamilton has worked in the central portion of the range for eight summers, traveling some 5,000 miles—4,000 of them on foot, the remainder via inflatable raft—studying and sampling in an area as large as New York and the New England states combined.

His research has been sponsored by the Arctic Institute of tally period.

After he captured the Illinois vote, Nixon wound up with 287 against Humphrey's 172 electoral votes. The magic number to the White House is 270.

ALASKA ELECTION

Here in Alaska, Mike Gravel overcame two opponents by capturing the votes for his U.S. Senate seat.

His opponents were Anchorage banker and Republican, Elmer Rasmuson, and the incumbent Sen. Ernest Gruening who had attempted to regain his seat via write-in vote after he was defeated by Mike Gravel for nomination in the primary election.

Congressman Howard W. Pollock defeated his opponent Nicholas J. Begich for re-election.

Just before election, Pollock had told Tundra Times that he was confident that he would be re-elected.

"But I'm worried about Elmer. I think Mike is going to take him," Pollock said.

Also just before election, Mike Gravel expressed confidence that he would be elected U.S. Senator. He said his chances looked good everywhere except the outlying areas.

"I'm worried about the bush," Gravel said.

Gravel's worries proved to be groundless however. He captured substantial bush vote in the tally that numbered 27,430 by Wednesday. Rasmuson received 22,771 and Gruening 9,584.

Howard Pollock received 32,088 and Nick Begich 27,586.

Earlier, Rasmuson camp declared through Flore Lekanof, an Aleut campaign worker for Rasmuson, that Elmer Rasmuson would capture the bush vote but as returns come in, that prediction did not materialize.

On the national level, the popular vote for President was almost deadlocked after more than 67 million votes had been counted.

On the state level, the Democrats captured the State House. University of Alaska bond issue sailed through without any trouble.

What Saith the Scriptures?

"For what shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul." Mark 8:36. In view of the fact that a person's soul is worth more than the whole world, we should accept nothing but the word of God, as to how a soul is assured of eternity in heaven. We have the word of God as to this most important question in Acts 16:30-31.

"Sirs what must I do to be saved? The answer, 'Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved . . .'" and in 1 John 5:13-13, "He that hath the Son hath life, he that hath not the Son, hath not life." Now note the Scripture that gives one to be sure. "These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God, that ye may know that ye have eternal life."
