

Gravel Pits, Sloughs Not Fit For Swimming

Gravel pits, rivers and sloughs in the immediate Fairbanks vicinity are not considered safe public bathing places. Local streams contain varying degrees of contamination.

The high sedimentation from river silt poses additional safety hazards by obstructing visibility in the water for rescue operations.

With the high run-off this year, parents are advised to caution their children of the dangers involved when around these waters.

AFN Requests Funnel Funds Per AFN

ANCHORAGE - Alaska Federation of Natives leaders recommended to Undersecretary of Commerce William F. Blunt Thursday that $370,000 in economic development administration funds for regional planning be funneled through AFN offices.

AFN Pres. Donald Wright, Executive Director Harry Carter, Clifford Black, director of the educational materials development program and others met with Blunt several hours.

Also in attendance were Ray Tanner, of the EDA Indian Desk in Washington and C. Mark

Smith, director of the Western Regional Office of EDA in Seattle.

The grant, to begin July 1, would finance technical assistance for planning regional development in accordance with the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act.

EDA officials have already talked with members of the Association of Village Council Presidents, the Arctic Slope Native Association and Tanana Chiefs Conference and were headed from Anchorage to southeastern Alaska to confer with the Tlingit-Haida Central Council.

FINALLY. AN 80CC BIKE WITH SOME GUTS.

Take the ST80. It has the guttiest 80cc engine on the market, yet it handles like a lightweight, safe and easy. How big is it? Big enough to fly up a 13,000 foot mountain with a 200-pounder aboard.
