In a letter to the governor, C. R. Stewart of Las Vegas, Nev. Parco's manager, commented, "we are highly impressed with the BIA mining and oil technician's program conducted by the university."

"We feel it is an excellent and realistic approach to the situation. We also feel that we can benefit by the program as well as provide benefit to it."

The students' course work is to include basic mathematics, drafting, general science, geology, english, mining and prospecting, surveying, milling and mineralogy.

The program is designed to give the students a basic knowledge of terms and procedures and to teach them the skills needed for placement with mining and petroleum firms.

The governor said Parco Inc. has agreed to cooperate in the program by accepting, during the next few months, the six available trainees from the class which completed the university course last month.

Clarifies Publicity...

bounty system or not, most will agree that management of wildlife resources should be free of politics.

Attempts to manage game on a political basis are made during every legislative session. If what the legislature has done displeases you, you should see the garbage we've held in committee and kept them from doing to you! As long as we're in the legislature we intend to continue to stand as a block of granite in the path of legislation dealing with game regulatory matters sponsored by political types hard pressed to say with assurance which end of the moose wears the antlers.

Now a defensive posture for a politician is a self-defeating stance. All the more so when he's attempting to fend off the scalping knives of numerous outraged bounty hunters in the process. There's no less impressive image than some office-seeker back on his heels making passionate denials over items appearing in the press. For this reason I've had occasion to be grateful that news coverage is slight in the hinterlands. I understand The TUNDRA TIMES picked up the erroneous story from the NEWS MINER. If so, the TIMES is not as yet on my list of Newspapers-In-Which-I-Hope-Never-To-See-My-Name. But fellows, this kind of publicity? Who needs it?

On the other hand, a story on our popular anti-poison legislation was buried somewhere west of the want ads and failed even to mention our name! To make amends, banner headlines retracting the former and lauding the latter would be perfectly acceptable!

Many thanks,
Jay S. Hammond

office of Commissioner of Revenue in the primaries last Tuesday but he was narrowly defeated. He was highly pleased that he came in second.

"I think it is a very good program and I'm learning a lot of things," Melvin Otten said. "I would also like to commend the Copper Valley School for the excellent food and excellent housing they are providing for us."

Melvin Otten said there were two other Eskimos beside himself and they were Ron Itta of Barrow and Henry Sookiyak of Nome.

"The program is also a big improvement over last year," he said. "Last year 45 attended and this year there are 101."

Otten said that the program was also a real challenge.

"They get us up at 6:15 a.m., then we do our chores and have breakfast," he said. "At 8:15, we have senate meetings and assembly meetings until lunch time at noon and it lasts till 1:30 p.m."

"After lunch we have more meetings and have some time for recreation until supper between 6:00 p.m. and 7:00 p.m. At 7:10, we have the lowering of the flag."

"We have more assembly meetings after that and we're through for the day around 9:00 p.m. or 9:30 p.m. They turn the lights out at 10:30 and by that time we're really ready to go to bed because we get awfully tired."

He added: "I think the Boys State is really a fine thing."

Tuberculosis Not Yet Licked So Be on Your Guard

Tuberculosis is not "licked" in Alaska as one would believe from reading the latest statistics released by the TB Control unit of the State Department of Health.

Although this report indicates that this State will no longer lead the nation in the number of new cases, analysis of the whole release clearly warns of a dangerous situation that could develop.

James S. Couch of the Alaska TB Association reflects the fear that the general public may gain an erroneous impression that there is no longer any great danger of another epidemic of the disease here, thus relaxing their vigilance and neglecting precautionary measures.

In 1960 the State experienced a similar reduction in the number of cases with resulting apathy, a cutting back of surveillance and follow ups, which brought about a sudden and serious up-swing.

Tuberculin testing, a simple and painless process, is available without charge at the Fairbanks Health Center.

"It is a wise precaution to have every member of every family tested to prevent any increase of TB in our State," Couch said.
