

Native Hiring in Canneries Improves

JUNEAU, ALASKA—Alaska's giant fish processing and canning industries in the western part of the state are hiring more native resident Alaskans than ever before and everyone seems to be happy with the arrangement.

Commissioner of Labor Thomas J. Moore reported this week that "more Alaska natives worked in more jobs in more fish processing and canning plants in Western Alaska in 1968 than in any other year in history."

Moore attributes the sharp upsurge in native employment in the fisheries to a "latent realization among cannery owners that it makes good business sense to hire qualified local workers." He predicted the day is "fast approaching" when some 90 percent of all processing and cannery labor will be hired locally.

"During the first eight months of this year, we placed nearly 200 Eskimos in fish processing and canning jobs in one small community in Western Alaska," Moore said. "Two years ago, we had a lot of trouble placing 70 Eskimos in the same area. As you can see, we are making notable progress. I think we may have reached a breakthrough in one segment of our local hiring program."

The commissioner singled out Pan Alaska Fisheries as "one of the pioneers" in the switchover to native labor. He said Pan Alaska gave employment to 92 Eskimos this year in its processing and canning plants.

He also commended Pacific Alaska Fisheries at King Cove, Columbia Ward Fisheries at Alitak and Port Bailey, the New England Fish Company at Uganik Bay, and Wakefield Fisheries at Port Lions "for the progress they are making in the use of local workers."

Moore said an average employee in a fish processing or fish canning job makes about $800 gross a month. He said the average worker receives a three or four-month contract a year, receives two-way air transportation and usually receives food and housing at a nominal charge.

"We are working for employment stability in the fish processing and canning industries," Moore said. "For years, we were faced with a 'worker duration' problem in these industries; our workers would complete 30 or 40 days of employment, then pick up and go home. But this is changing. More and more of the workers are fulfilling their contracts and returning from year to year. Work stability is being achieved, slowly but surely."

TOP OF THE TICKET—Mike Gravel, candidate for the U. S. Senate, meets with his party's standard-bearers Hubert H. Humphrey and Edmund Muskie at Dulles International Airport in Washington, D. C. Gravel has been in Washington conferring with U.S. Senate and party leaders. He returned to Anchorage Wednesday.

NATIONAL NEWSPAPER WEEK

OCTOBER 6-12

Observe with us the National Newspaper Week on October 6-12—and remember us—TUNDRA TIMES

Land Selection Bill Coming Up Mon. In Washington

HR 17874, the bill to extend the time for state land selection is coming up Monday in the House of Representatives. The bill would extend the selection nine months, or until September 3, 1969.

Under the old law, the selection period for ten years of a 25-year period would have expired on January 3, 1969, or four months away.

"It will give the new administration time to get a hard look at it," said Frank Albert, administrative assistant to Congressman Howard Pollock.

Pollock, who is now in Alaska, has been designated as a floor manager for the bill. He will fly to Washington, D. C. Sunday for the expressed purpose of having the bill acted upon.

Subscribe to TUNDRA TIMES

Kohler Light Plants
Tillie Heaters and Lamps
Electric Motors—All Types

Complete Service For Generators
Electric Motors
Power Tools and Welders

Write today for further information

AERO SERVICES CO.

Box 2191 — Phillips Field
479-0666
Fairbanks, Alaska

It's the next best thing to a bridge . . . the Trainship "Alaska" . . . newest in the trade and Alaska's only railcar service by self-propelled ship. Cars are carried below deck . . . protected from salt water . . . and inspected regularly en route. At 18 knots, the regular weekly voyage takes 68 hours . . . the fastest railcar service between Alaska

The only rail service to Alaska that coddles your cargo.

and any point in the lower 48. The Trainship "Alaska" is represented by The Man From Alaska Line . . . who will gladly give you more information about this or any part of Alaska Line's total transportation system. Write or call him soon. He'll appreciate the chance to prove that The Man From Alaska Line has a better way to transport almost everything!

ALASKA LINE

Alaska Steamship Company / Traffic and Sales Representative: Alaska Trainship Corporation
543 3rd Avenue, Fairbanks, Alaska, Phone: 452-3057

