Daily routine of oceanographic vessels consists primarily of occupying scientific "stations." Each station entails stopping the ship to collect samples of marine life and sea water for analysis either aboard or at the home laboratory.

Hundreds of such stations, some requiring up to four or five hours, would be necessary to cover an area as large as that shown in a single photograph taken from a satellite.

BCF scientists hope that the broader coverage offered by spacecraft picture transmission, combined with routine oceanographic observations, will provide a more effective and more rapid method of surveying the ocean.
